Air Canada Foundation Grants Program Focus

The Air Canada Foundation is committed to helping kids spread their wings. Through its grants program, the Air Canada Foundation strives to support the health and well-being of children and youth by funding programs that create a lasting impact on children from equity-deserving* groups.

Applicants must demonstrate that the project for which they are requesting a grant will help increase access to care and services, remove barriers and foster well-being for children and youth from underserved* groups.

Employee Engagement

Air Canada employees across Canada are passionate about giving back to their communities. It is important for us to leverage our assets to make a difference, including our employees. We encourage applicants to outline in their request how employee engagement and volunteering can be integrated.

Application Process

All applications must be submitted online by December 31. Please provide detailed information about your project, how the funds will be used and the recognition benefits.

Requests will go through a meticulous evaluation process. All applicants will receive a written response from the team before the end of April. We appreciate your patience in allowing us to properly evaluate your proposal.

Tips for Applying

- We appreciate both grassroots and national projects. Please outline how your initiative is making a difference.
- Coordinating resources is important, if you are working in partnership with other organizations, tell us about it.
- Please provide a project budget so we can understand the scope of your initiative.
- Tell us about what is unique in your approach.
- We understand quantifying impact is difficult, but if you are able to share how you are making an impact, we'd appreciate it. Quantitative and qualitative measures are welcome.
- If you feel there are opportunities to introduce the world of aviation to the people you serve, please tell us more.

 This document includes the terms "equity-deserving" and "underserved". We acknowledge that the terms we use are inadequate to fully describe the experiences of these communities and do not capture the extent of the barriers members face. For clarity, please note that these terms have been used throughout this document.*
